"Although this tape is unfinished in any obvious sense, I feel that it draws attention to what I was most concerned with at that time, that is the remarkable sensitivity of the medium, more specifically, the vidicon tube its changes and effects of light and image during recording. This recording was more "form evolving" than "objective seeking", the duration effected by the videotapes actual length."

Electronic Concepts of videotapes shown:
'The Matter' A dot pattern with its raster is displayed on a scan processor. Three basic waves, sine, triangle and square, generated by a locked waveform generator, are applied to shape the display. A slow ramp generator controls the size and image drift. The identical image forming waves are the source of sound.

'C-Trend' A camera view from a window is displayed on a scan processor. The identical image signal is fed into the vertical deflection system of the scan processor, translating the energy structure of the image into a vertical position of scan-lines. The displayed raster is shaped with locked wave form generators and retimed by an external clock causing a slow drift.

'Noisefields', coloured snow is keyed through a circle and switched into its inverted mode at various rates. The energy content of the video modulates the sound
